Remarks:- An intelligent, hard-working, upstanding lad. He was so capable and so reliable that we sometimes overburdened him with responsibilities. But he never shirked them and always discharged them efficiently.

He was the best Senior Prefect we have had for many years. Because he practised what he preached, because he did not have to rely on intimidation, he made a very good disciplinarian. He was utterly loyal too. One of his greatest extra-curricular interests was the School's Social Service Union of which he was an earnest member.

He benefitted from all the School had to give him, and made a significant contribution to School. Indeed, he was so concerned to do all he could for the School and the School community that he tended sometimes to neglect his legitimate studies.

I know I can rely on him to maintain in the larger life he now enters, the high standards he helped to keep in School.
